Wake County Efforts to Protect Private Well Users from Contamination

Evan Kane,

Groundwater Manager,
Wake County Environmental Services

Private wells are an important component of the water resource infrastructure in Wake County, where nearly 15 percent of residents rely on private wells, and throughout North Carolina, where private wells serve roughly 25 percent of residents. Evan Kane will share information on contamination risks facing private well users in Wake County and statewide and approaches Wake County has taken to address these risks in its permitting, outreach, and technical assistance programs.
